Leading and developing people can be an incredibly rewarding experience and yet many management professionals struggle to keep their teams motivated and inspired each day. If you are managing a staff that has developed bad habits, or inherited a team that is resistant to change, or maybe just thrown into a leadership role with little to no previous experience, this workshop will help you.

- 2 days of training
- materials
- lunch & refreshments

You will learn how to...

- Connect with your team
- Establish buy-in to new ideas
- Define standards and set expectations
- Hire with conviction
- Be an effective coach
- Track progress
- Build a culture of accountability
- Be confident during challenging conversations

Who should attend:

Executives and management professionals that want to build successful, motivated, self-directed teams

Common Management Challenges:

- Staff lacks energy and motivation
- Team does not know how to be successful without constant direction
- Too busy with your own job to hold your staff accountable
- New hires are picking up bad habits
- Team performance is inconsistent
- Micromanagement is exhausting you and your team
- Staff has tuned you out
- Team is not open to change
- Cannot tell if you are adding any value
- People always come to you with problems
- No one comes to you with ideas
- The office is empty when you are not there
- Not sure if you are tracking the right metrics
- Difficulty holding the team accountable
- Cannot terminate employees because no one else can do the job
- Avoid difficult conversations
